

THE GROBIN DAVIS SITE: ARCHAEOGEOPHYSICS AND SETTLEMENT PATTERNS AT CADDO MOUND CENTERS IN SOUTHEASTERN OKLAHOMA

Amanda L. Regnier,<sup>1</sup>
Scott W. Hammerstedt,<sup>2</sup>
and Nicholas H. Beale<sup>3</sup>

The Grobin Davis site (34MC253) is the best-preserved known prehistoric Caddo mound site in southeastern Oklahoma. The site, located along the Little River, consists of seven mounds arranged in a horseshoe configuration. Archaeological excavations at the site have been limited to a series of posthole tests and three 1-m-1-m units. Between November 2011 and February 2012, the Oklahoma Archeological Survey conducted geophysical survey of the bulk of the site, covering approximately 32,000 m<sup>2</sup> with a fluxgate gradiometer. This study provides important information about Caddo mound construction, settlement, and ceremonialism in southeastern Oklahoma and add to a growing body of literature on prehistoric Caddo community patterns.

The Grobin Davis (34MC253) mound complex is one of the largest and certainly the best-preserved Caddo mound site in eastern Oklahoma (Figure 1). The site is made up of seven mounds arranged in a horseshoe shape on a terrace of the Little River (Figure 2). Unlike many contemporaneous mound sites in the region, it has never been heavily looted, has not been the focus of substantial archaeological excavations, and has escaped being submerged by a stream impoundment. While looters and professional archaeologists alike have been active in the region for well over a century, the site remained untouched by either group until the late 1970s. Since the site was recorded, the only professional fieldwork consisted of limited eligibility testing in 1983 by a crew from the Oklahoma Archeological Survey. After the testing, the Archaeological Conservancy purchased the site and no further archaeological work has been undertaken. The initial testing confirmed the seven earthen mounds were manmade features, established rough occupation dates of A.D. 1200–1400, and indicated the presence of a possible sheet midden in areas of the site. Given the limited extent of the excavations, numerous questions remain about the role of Grobin Davis in the daily and ritual lives of the prehistoric Caddo of the Little River drainage. Did the site have any sustained year-round occupation or was it a vacant ceremonial center with a small resident population of religious specialists? How did each of the seven mounds at the site fit into the broader categories of mounds constructed by the prehistoric Caddo? Was the horseshoe configuration of mounds part of a larger site plan that incorporated a plaza area and residential buildings?

Between November 2011 and February 2012, we conducted a gradiometer survey of approximately 32,400 m<sup>2</sup> of the 10-ha site (see Figure 2). In recent years, archaeological geophysics has moved beyond a simple prospection tool and can be used to generate information on a site-wide scale, including site plans and broader issues of landscape utilization (Kvamme 2003). Understanding the site plan will also allow us to consider the ways in which the site was integrated into the regional ritual landscape, as part of the broader application of geophysical research (Thompson et al. 2011). This article presents the results of the survey and summarizes prior excavations in order to better understand the role of Grobin Davis in the political and religious landscape of the prehistoric Caddo of southeast Oklahoma and the larger Caddo region as a whole as part of an ongoing regional research effort (Dowd 2011, 2012; Hammerstedt et al. 2010; Regnier 2012, 2013; Regnier and Dowd 2013; Regnier et al. 2013).

Site Background

Previous Archaeological Investigations

The Grobin Davis mounds are at the confluence of the Little River and White Oak Creek in the rolling piedmont territory between the Coastal Plain of the Red River and the southern extent of the Ouachita Mountains. The Little River originates in the Ouachita Mountains, where it flows west, turns south, and finally turns southeast, paralleling the Red River,
