How they are Related

PREGNANCY GINGIVITIS

Did you know that you can develop a unique form of gingivitis while pregnant? Changing hormone levels can make your gums swell, bleed more easily, and feel irritated. Floss and rinse regularly.

CRAVINGS

Pregnancy can make you crave foods like pickles and ice cream that are terrible for your teeth, ranging from the highly acidic to the sugary. It's important to brush and floss after each meal to prevent plaque buildup and enamel damage.

PREGNANCY "TUMORS"

During the second trimester of pregnancy, you may develop small, benign masses between the teeth as a result of hormonal shifts. While they may fade after giving birth, you can visit a dentist to inspect and remove them.

MORNING SICKNESS

Morning nausea, heartburn and reflux during pregnancy can be difficult enough to endure. However, it's important to remember the permanent effects that regurgitated acids can have on your teeth. Acids deteriorate enamel, increasing risk of decay.

Schrotilgen,2009 This study discusses the effect of poor oral health during pregnancy and the lack of education about dental care from health care providers There are multiple risk factors that can cause preterm birth and low birth weight A risk factor such as poor oral health can be avoided with proper maternal education from health care professionals By evaluating current maternal knowledge of proper oral hygiene gaps in education can be identified and addressed Questionnaires were sent to three local women s health clinics A total of 178 completed questionnaires were used for analysis In asking about their education 61% did not know that there was a definite relationship between poor dental health and low birth weight and 65% did not know the relationship between poor dental health and preterm birth During a routine OB visit 62% reported that their OB did not discuss dental care with them while 16% said their OB did and 22% did not remember Also 131 of the women felt they did have sufficient knowledge of proper dental care during their pregnancy However of those women 47 had answered no to at least five of the nine factoids in the knowledge section of the questionnaire These findings bring awareness that there is a need for proper oral health care and education by health care professionals during pregnancy *Maternity Handbook for Public Health Nurses Allegheny County (Pa.).
