

PREHISTORIC CHERT EXPLOITATION IN THE VALLE DEL CESOLONE (MACERATA): A PRELIMINARY PROJECT REPORT

INTRODUCTION

During the Copper and Bronze Ages in the Marche region (fourth to second millennia cal. BC), the adoption of broader and more specialized settlement and subsistence strategies led to the exploitation of localized resources found in the forested upland interior of the region (Skeates, 1997). Chert was one such resource, valued as a raw material for the production of flaked stone tools, as a commodity of exchange and possibly also as an element of visual display. Its major sources, situated along the eastern edge of the Apennine mountains, could be reached via the tributary streams of major river valleys running between the Adriatic coastal lowlands and mountain passes in the Apennines, and were exploited in at least three different localities in the Macerata province during later prehistory. These three known sources, associated with the archaeological remains of the primary procurement and working of chert, comprise: sites found at the head of the Magliano and Rudielle valleys situated to the south of Cingoli (Percossi and Silvestrini, 1986: 30–1); sites found around the middle section of the river Potenza, situated in the area around Castelraimondo, San Severino Marche and Tolentino, such as Contrada Piolo near Serralta (unpublished material in the Pascucci collection, San Severino Marche Museum; Piangatelli, 1970: 29); and sites found at the head of the Cesolone valley situated near Serrapetrona and to the south of San Severino Marche (see references below). The latter source comprised the focus for the project described below. The aim of this project, directed by the author between 1992 and 1995, was to investigate the nature of the chert procurement, tool production and exchange activities practised at and around this source during prehistory. Similar projects focusing on prehistoric flint extraction sites had previously been carried out in northern and southern Italy (for example: Galiberti, 1987; Barfield, 1990), but this was the first scientific research project of its kind in central Italy.

EARLY DISCOVERIES

The project began by analysing the published results of archaeological fieldwork and surviving museum collections of prehistoric artefacts made along the Cesolone valley during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

The first of these collections was made by Count Giuseppe Gnoli in 1882 and successive years (Pigorini and Gnoli, 1888: 45–6). His most important

Lithic Analysis George H. Odell, 2012-12-06 Procedures by which archaeological stone tools have been analyzed have tradition ally operated on an apprenticeship model whereby a novice acquires competency at the elbow of a grizzled but revered expert in the field After shuffling through literally thousands of stones and asking hundreds of questions the neophyte even tually reaches a level at which he or she can fly solo requiring less and less attention from the Master While this pedagogical model has been frequently tried and tested it is not always the most efficient method it is very labor intensive and it requires a resident lithics expert a situation that often does not exist in reality Learning the ropes would clearly be more practical if there were a manual to consult a book that provides information and direction so that the Master might at least be spared the most elemental questions and would not have to be available all the time For years no such manual existed but recently the ice has been broken by Bill Andrefsky's Lithics Macroscopic Approaches to Analysis and Brian Kooyman's Understanding Stone Tools and Archaeological Sites These are good books and can profitably be employed by fledgling lithic analysts My own interest in writing a manual for stone tool analysts derives initially from the way I was trained literally at the knees of two Masters in this case revered but not grizzled Dr Raymond R Newell in typological and technological matters and Dr Ruth E Tringham in functional studies

Eastern Paleoindian Lithic Resource Use Christopher Ellis, 2021-11-28 Originally published in 1989 Eastern Paleoindian Lithic Resource Use is a series of papers that examine Paleoindian lifeways from various viewpoints all of which have their foundations in stone and examining artifacts Exploring the link between lithic materials especially cryptocrystallines and chert and Paleoindian mobility and looking at the transport of stone seasonal resource availability stone caches use as social markers and land movement patterns and its surrounding data

Making Ancient Cities Andrew T. Creekmore, III, Kevin D. Fisher, 2014-04-28 This volume investigates how the structure and use of space developed and changed in cities and examines the role of different societal groups in shaping urbanism Culturally and chronologically diverse case studies provide a basis to examine recent theoretical and methodological shifts in the archaeology of ancient cities The book's primary goal is to examine how ancient cities were made by the people who lived in them The authors argue that there is a mutually constituting relationship between urban form and the actions and interactions of a plurality of individuals groups and institutions each with their own motivations and identities Space is therefore socially produced as these agents operate in multiple spheres

Written in Stone P. Nick Kardulias, Richard W. Yerkes, 2003-01-01 Written in Stone The Multiple Dimensions of Lithic Analysis demonstrates the vitality of contemporary lithics analysis by examining material from a variety of geographical locations This edited collection is primarily concerned with the link between craft production and social complexity the nature of trade and the delineation of settlement patterns and manipulation of landscape While deconstructing the present to reconstruct the past each chapter incorporates a technological dimension shaped by the type of analysis utilized Methods include microwear analysis which adds significant understanding of stone tool function to the identification of obsidian sources which illustrates the potential of lithic provenance studies for reconstructing trade This book verifies and expands on the notion that lithics play an integral role in our understanding of past societies at all levels of complexity from Paleolithic hunter gatherers to archaic states
