Making Enemies R. Barker, 2006-12-07 Whom a prime minister or president will not shake hands with is still more noticed than with whom they will Public identity can afford to be ambiguous about friends but not about enemies Barker examines the accounts of how enmity functions in the cultivation of identity how essential or avoidable it is and what the global consequences are

World War II in 50 Posters Ann P. Linder, 2026-03-30 Despite the increasing influence of film and radio before and during the Second World War poster propaganda retained its ability to persuade and its favored position as an influential tool of combatant nations With colorful images and forceful messages the governments of the U S and Europe including distant colonies and occupied territories attempted to manipulate public opinion to achieve their aim victory By its nature war propaganda is profoundly national and emotional Its appeal may be blunt or subtle but it must be carefully targeted to its specific audience to be effective To trace the inner workings of poster propaganda across the cultures of the World War II combatants Dr Ann Linder has grouped the posters into thematic chapters working through the details of each poster peeling back its layers of historical and social reference its store of values and common memories until she brings the reader with her into an understanding of what its wartime viewers saw and felt in their own time and place Her analysis is complemented by a full page color reproduction of each poster which precedes her lucid and approachable explication of the interaction of image and text that controls the effect the poster had on its targeted audience Many of the themes are familiar national values industrial production espionage and food supplies among others but each government approaches the theme through its own values artistic styles and vision of itself The posters are carefully ordered to highlight the varied approaches of the combatant nations to similar problems Each poster serves as a window into the past Through analyses of the military social cultural and artistic history behind each poster its full historical context can be seen and its influence assessed The vivid imagery of the posters brings the scenes to life for the reader drawing the reader into an earlier time while still maintaining historical distance The detailed knowledge embedded in Dr Linder's thoughtful commentary draws together the many strands that are woven into war propaganda

Propaganda during the Second World War was an unavoidable aspect of daily life It must be a situation that is hard to relate to for those of us in the West born too late or too young to remember the war or the decades afterwards The idea that you must always be alert to the ominous drone of the air raid sirens as you went about your business or that your home could be destroyed in an aerial bombardment at any moment is very hard to comprehend But those who lived through the war knew it was perfectly possible that the Wehrmacht could soon be marching through the streets with all the chaos fear death and destruction that that would imply Against this backdrop we can understand why propaganda was so vital to all sides of the conflict For those interested in the psychology of the past propaganda posters are a great glimpse into the understandable paranoia hysteria and concerns of those who created them and the message they thought it was necessary to promote to everyone else All of these posters served some sort of purpose and modern cynicism means it is often hard not to scoff at some of them because to us they are now often unintentionally humorous or offensive Those in government at the time knew that war had evolved The Great War had changed much and this latest conflict with Germany would create a huge strain both in terms of morale and in the nation s resources and it was vital to have and maintain full support for the war at home While propaganda was nothing new it came into its own during the Second World War British posters were in the main created by the controversial Ministry of Information a government department that was dissolved soon after the war and probably one of George Orwell s inspirations for Big Brother Many contemporary members of parliament were very disturbed by the agenda of this department and protested that there was a very real danger that Britain could ironically sleep walk into becoming the fascist brain washed state with which they were at war The messages behind most of these posters is overt and obvious The well known but never actually distributed Keep Calm and Carry On posters are still recognisable to us today over 70 years later Other messages may verge on the bizarre to those who never knew the horrors of the conflict first hand One poster shows a soldier and his partner on a sofa with the message Keep mum stay silent she might not be so dumb implying that his girlfriend may at best be a loudmouth who will report his military operations to everyone in town and at worst be a Gestapo agent who had been planted into his home This isn t to mock the sentiment but simply to point out how difficult it is for a modern mind to understand Other posters urging mothers to evacuate their children away from towns as refugees to find safety in the countryside or even abroad to the security of Canada or other parts of the empire are quite shocking Still more so are those which implied that people taking a day off work due to sickness could be shirking or that those who lost a tool at work were aiding Hitler are quite unsettling even now American propaganda was often racist showing rat like Japanese One dramatic poster featuring two creepy children in their gas masks and proclaiming Dear God keep them safe is still striking On the Axis side they were oddly obsessed with reminding Allied soldiers particularly Americans that their women were back at home probably sleeping with someone else and that the negroes were now running the country
