November 2013 Brenton Plays: 2 Howard Brenton, 2013-12-04 Howard Brenton is one of Britain's best known and most controversial dramatists. The Romans in Britain was the play that brought calls to bring back censorship when it was first staged at the National in 1980. It conjures up an era that is culturally as well as historically remote, which is a notoriously difficult task, but Mr Brenton achieves it with great skill and effect, a very good play indeed. In The Thirteenth Night He sets the characters of Shakespeare to find the elements in the British character which could transform an Englishman into a Stalin and closes in on his creation with an overall wit to match his horror. The Times The Genius is teeming with memorable stage pictures and bristling with Brenton's very best writing, flinty, impassioned, explosive. Financial Times In Bloody Poetry Brenton is doing something markedly ambitious in this phantasmagoric play. He is celebrating the idea of the committed artist who seeks to stir and provoke sullen, defeated bourgeois England. At the same time, with clear-eyed honesty, he shows how difficult it is to upset the moral order. The Guardian Greenland is on the one hand a cry of disillusionment with established political forms; on the other, it is full of typically lively Brentonesque satire and lampoons. Brenton's message is a welcome antidote to the madness in which we all now seem to be living, and a sharp blast against patriarchy, as well as other attendant woes. City Limits Message from a Stranger Marya Mannes, 1948 The Quarterly Review, 1898

Seeing Nature Through Gender Virginia Scharff, 2003 Environmental history has traditionally told the story of Man and Nature. Scholars have too frequently overlooked the ways in which their predominantly male subjects have themselves been shaped by gender. Seeing Nature through Gender here reintroduces gender as a meaningful category of analysis for environmental history, showing how women's actions, desires, and choices have shaped the world, and seeing men as gendered actors as well. In thirteen essays that show how gendered ideas have shaped the ways in which people have represented, experienced, and consumed their world, Virginia Scharff and her coauthors explore interactions between gender and environment in history. Ranging from colonial borderlands to transnational boundaries, from mountaintop to marketplace, they focus on historical representations of humans and nature, on questions about consumption, on environmental politics, and on the complex reciprocal relations among human bodies and changing landscapes. They also challenge the ecofeminist position by challenging the notion that men and women are essentially different creatures with biologically different destinies. Each article shows how a person or group of people in history have understood nature in gendered terms and acted accordingly, often with dire consequences for other people and organisms. Here are considerations of the ways we study sexuality among birds of William Byrd's masking sexual encounters in his account of an eighteenth-century expedition, of how the ecology of fire in a changing built environment has reshaped firefighters' own gendered identities. Some are playful, as in a piece on the evolution of snow bunnies to shred bunnies. Others are dead serious, as in a chilling portrait of how endocrine disruptors are reinventing humans animals and water systems from the cellular level out Aiding and adding significantly to the enterprise of environmental history Seeing Nature through Gender bridges gender history and environmental history in unexpected ways to show us how the natural world can remake the gendered patterns we ve engraved on ourselves and on the planet
